Dear Mr. Director:

Recently, you received from the American Mining Congress a copy of a report, "The International Competitiveness of the U.S. Nonferrous Smelting Industry and the Clean Air Act." Unfortunately, the letter transmitting that report contained a significant typographical error.

On page 2 of the letter, line 4, a cost figure of $50 million is given. That figure should be $850 million. The sentence utilizing that figure should read:

Two current examples include EPA's consideration of a short-term sulfur dioxide standard, which the industry estimates could cost in excess of $850 million in capital costs, nearly as much as the copper industry spent for all environmental controls during the entire decade of the 1970s, and proposed changes to the tax laws, including repeal of safe harbor leasing and the alternative minimum tax proposal, which would uniquely hurt the mining and metals processing industry.

A copy of the first page of the transmittal letter and a corrected copy of the second page are attached. Please destroy the original.

We regret the error.

Sincerely,

STAT

Senior Counsel
